The list of companies seeking payment for work performed on the Chicago Spire project continues to grow.

Late last month, Thornton Tomasetti, a New York-based firm with an office in Chicago, filed a mechanics lien against the project for $1.3 million for structural engineering design services it provided. The firm said it last worked on the Shelbourne Development Group Inc. project on July 1.

Last month, architect Santiago Calatrava filed a lien through his Lente Festina Ltd. seeking more than $11.3 million in payment from developer Shelbourne.

Separately, Chicago-based architectural design firm Perkins & Will Inc. filed a lien against Shelbourne for almost $4.85 million.
